...The Hurricane Network will experimentally be transmitting products this hurricane season in Spanish...

To convey products better to communities where the primary language is Spanish, The Hurricane Network starting this season will transmit select products in Spanish. These products will be automatically processed and transmitted using artificial intelligence immediately following the issuance of the English version of the respective product.

The Hurricane Network plans to roll out these Spanish products over the next month with the Tropical Cyclone Outlook product being the first to be rolled out this week.

Starting in the middle of July, The Hurricane Network will begin to transmit automatically translated versions of the Tropical Cyclone Public Advisories.

Users and partners can now find the Spanish translated Tropical Cyclone Outlook at <https://thehurricanenet.com/outlook/spn/> or click the en Español link on the English version of the product.

Users and partners are reminded that this experimental product has been processed automatically using Artificial Intelligence and may contain errors and we cannot guarantee the accuracy of the translated text. When in doubt, please use the English version of the product.

Please send any comments or feedback regarding this change via our contact/feedback form at <https://thehurricanenet.com/about/>.
